Not illustrated. 1884-01-01 Excerpt: ...seen was on its side, with its side fin at the surface of the water, and was thought to be a sunfish. It was easily captured. No one of the hundreds of persons who have been here to see the fish have been able to identify its genus and species. I hope to hear from you concerning its identity. Gloucester, Mass., May 18, 1884. The strange fish was caught 20 miles southeast from Block Island. The fish when seen was on its side with side-fin and tail in motion. When seen the men thought it was a sunfish; they rowed up to it in a dory, threw a harpoon into it, and towed it alongside the vessel, where it was taken on board and put in the ice-house. The fish was caught Thursday, May 15, schooner Carrie B. Parsons, Capt. Albert Greenlow. There is no expense on the fish except the box. The Atlantic Halibut Company gave me the ice. The captain asked me if I could get him the history of the mackerel fishery and one of the last bulletins. If you will send them to me I will forward them to Captain Greenlow when the vessel is in. I am glad the fish was in good order when it arrived in Washington. Gloucester, Mass., May 25, 1884. Summary.--During the past week there have been thirty-nine arrivals from Georges Banks, landing an aggregate of 980,000 pounds of codfish; thirteen arrivals from the Banks, aggregating 220,000 pounds of fresh halibut, and 980 barrels of salt mackerel landed by ten vessels. There have also been landed during the past week 70,000 pounds of haddock, 75,000 pounds of shore fish, and 198,000 pounds of pollock. Identified by Dr. T. H. Boan as Epinephelus nigriiui. Weighing 300 pounds. (See his statement, page 240.) Halibut.--The vessels fishing on Georges

Banks are doing well. There are thirty-one vessels engaged in halibut fishing. Gloucester h...
