

I Am Mine

How do you want to be defined? By your job, your heritage, or your social status? What if you were defined by your family and friends? Would that be an appropriate depiction of who you truly are? Or would you want someone to dig deeper if they want to truly know you? Many people choose to avoid artificial labels and want to be defined by their beliefs. They want their faith to be what they see in the mirror. They want their ideals to be on display for all to see. I Am Mine provides a podium for these people to share their stories of who they are, and how theyve obtained this identity. We may not all agree with each other, and these disagreements may turn violent and may never reach a conclusion. But thats simply because so many of us hold our beliefs above all other aspects of our lives. We are our ideals, not our 9-5 jobs. We are our beliefs, not our bank account levels. And while we respect each others beliefs, and each others personal testimonies, we know that nothing can touch our own. While some of us may be able to identify with one another, and may even pray together, we are still separate. You are yours. And I Am Mine.
