Editor Medical Brief:--The familiar, conversational style of the Brief suits me. I like its short and sharp articles, always to the point. I have several bound volumes and find them quite an encyclopedia. I wish to report my experience with some of the new ideas received from the Brief. About a year ago Dr. M. Milton, of Bradford, Pa., called the attention of the profession to the value of powdered extract of gulf weed in the reduction of corpulence or excessive accumulation of fat. I could not find the remedy in the drug stores or mentioned in druggists circulars. I believe it is a French preparation, recently introduced into this country. I wrote to Dr. Milton, who indicated the source of supply. The price is high, about five dollars per lb., but the dose is small. I usually prescribe five grains every two hours, but in the absence of any reliable preparation that will do the work it does, it is cheap. One patient weighing two hundred and forty-six pounds was reduced in eight weeks to one hundred and ninety-six. This was my first and most remarkable case. No particular attention was paid to dieting, but abstinence from fluids as much as convenient was insisted on. This patient was troubled with hemorrhoid...
